Kashmir In Autumn (October to November)

Temperature* – Kashmir's brief autumn temperatures range from lows of 9°C to highs of at least 20°C.

Weather – The weather during this time has a bite of a chill in it, certainly as winter is almost here at this time. Still, it can be considered cool and not extremely cold. During evenings and nights, it can reach 0°C- 7, and if you're someone who has come from warmer climes, you're going to find this weather quite cold. Mornings can be misty, but the autumn sun is also refreshing and toasty warm.

Significance – Kashmir's beauty during autumn is simply breathtaking during this time. The leaves on the famed chinar trees turn copper and gold and as far as you can see, lined along avenues, you will find trees flush with red-gold-yellow leaves and the ground is often carpeted with them. The vision is absolutely spectacular and unforgettable.

Why you should visit now – During autumn, places like Srinagar and nearby places turn into gorgeous sights with the trees turning shades of gold. With weather being reasonably cool and not too cold, many people consider this to be the best time to visit Kashmir. Apple-picking and other harvestings also take place during this time. Kashmir during autumn is indeed magnificent and resplendent with its rich colours.

Tips – If you're headed to Kashmir during the autumn months, do find out if there's any apple-picking happening nearby so you can also join in, if it's allowed. Another thing to remember is that despite being nearly normal weather for Kashmiris, you might still find it cold, so do pack your clothes as though for winter.
